Interregional cross-residencies between Est-Nord-Est and the Centre d'art et de diffusion CLARK

Est-Nord-Est and Centre d'art et de diffusion CLARK have joined forces to develop a program of interregional cross-residencies. The organizations invite cultural workers (authors, curators, researchers) from Chaudière-Appalaches/Bas-Saint-Laurent and Montreal regions to propose research-creation projects with a one-month (31-day) timeline that can be subdivided into up to two periods (2 weeks) over the course of a year, in line with the values of Est-Nord-Est and CLARK: adapting to one's availability and needs, according to personal and professional realities.

Through this program, Est-Nord-Est and Centre CLARK aim to:

- Support cultural workers by providing them with a flexible residency context and appropriate resources for research-creation.
- Promote cultural workers' practices: writing, publishing, research projects, curating, etc.
- Develop new networks for research-creation, production and dissemination between Chaudière-Appalaches/Bas-Saint-Laurent regions and Montreal.

Presentation of Est-Nord-Est and Centre d'art et de diffusion CLARK

Located in Saint-Jean-Port-Joli on the shores of the St. Lawrence River, Est-Nord-Est (ENE) is an artist-run centre for research in contemporary art. Its primary objective is to provide artists and writers with space and time for experimentation, as well as privileged access to diversified local resources and know-how. The centre invites residents to invest freely in new creative territories, without a predetermined production objective linked to a distribution imperative. This residency offer responds to a clear need on the part of artists and writers, for whom the benefit of a context entirely devoted to exploration is essential to the professional development of their practice. This ideology is reflected in the architecture of the building, which brings together living and working spaces under the same roof. This structuring of the premises, offering a smooth transition from collective to private, erases the spirit earning to live together harmoniously during many shared moments, convivial as well as professional.

The Centre d'art et de diffusion CLARK is an artist-run centre in Montreal dedicated to the production and dissemination of contemporary art. It is divided into several physical and virtual spaces with diverse functions. The two main components of the Centre are the gallery, which comprises two rooms within which exhibitions are presented. The Centre also comprises a Poste audio, through which five sound art pieces are broadcasted each year, the Librairie CLARK, which offers publication launches and readings, and a residency studio. CLARK produces several off-site projects, including performances and collaborates with a variety of cultural and community partners.
